The Truist Foundation stewardship guidelines

Generally, we require grantees to wait at least three years between their grant award and the next request. We do this because the Truist Foundation doesn't make multiyear grants, nor do we support annual grants. This policy allows us to provide grantees with all funding at the time of the award to support longer-term needs.

Of course, we can't grant all requests. But if your organization doesn't receive a grant, there's no waiting period to apply again.
